"Two years of retirement from the Lab have passed like two weeks, but the friends we made over the 24 years are just a phone call away — especially when Hurricane Bob was predicted to come ashore at Narragansett Bay shortly after noon, as it did.

"Phone service was not interrupted, and we were glad to hear from so many BNL friends on Long Island and those now living at great distances prior to, during and after the storm. We were fortunate in sustaining no personal damage, but our small island was almost devastated. We were grateful to have our BNL-purchased generator, for we were able to provide our friends and neighbors with coffee, tea, showers, ice and refrigeration for five days, until power was restored.

"Many thanks for the weekly Bulletin, which helps keep us in touch with events and happenings that affect our friends — friendships that time and distance do not diminish. We wish you all a very merry Christmas and a healthy, happy New Year."

"After two years, I'm finally starting to really enjoy my retirement. That period of adjustment, — learning to live with a spouse 24 hours a day, not having friends to talk to during the day — was difficult. I went back every day for the first two months, but gradually tapered off to an occasional visit.

"More and more now I enjoy the freedom to come and go as I please, whether it be a trip around the world or a trip to North Carolina to visit grandchildren.

"We intend, for the moment, to enjoy summers on Long Island and to travel to warm places in the winter."

Breaking the Ice With the Soviets

By Dennis Puleston

Since retiring in 1970 from his position as the Lab's Technical and Public Information Officer, Dennis Puleston has centered his activities around his life-long fascination with the natural world. Shortly after his retirement, he began serving as a naturalist on various ecological expeditions. In that capacity, he has traveled numerous times to both the Antarctic and the Arctic. In the following article, the 85-year-old Puleston recounts his most recent Arctic adventures.

My two most recent voyages as naturalist and lecturer on small cruise vessels have been the most unusual and exciting of the more than 160 that I have made since the early 1970s.

The ship I was on is a recently built, nuclear-powered Soviet icebreaker, the Sovetskiy Soyuz (Soviet Union). She was chartered by Quark Expeditions with Salen Lindblad Cruising, a company I frequently work for, to make two cruises into the high Arctic during the later summer: The first to cross the Transpolar Bridge; the second to transit the Northeast Passage.

The Soviet government, always eager for U.S. dollars, was pleased to accept the charter. By late July, I boarded the ship in Murmansk harbor, along with several other lecture staff and 86 passengers — mostly Americans, but some Europeans.

We were soon to learn of the 150-meter-long ship's marvelous capabilities, and our first impressions were all favorable. She was clean, comfortable and efficient, and her twin reactors provided a maximum horsepower of 75,000 and a top speed in open water of 22 knots.

Sailing out of the Kola River, we headed northward to a group of uninhabited islands known as Franz Josef Land. We spent several days there, studying seabird colonies, botany, geology and glaciology.

Here we found our first polar bears. At 2 a.m., five animals were sighted on the pack ice around a bloody stain where a bearded seal had been killed. A wake-up call brought everyone on deck, with broad daylight revealing the fascinating scene. The animals were reluctant to leave the kill, so the ship was able to ease slowly and quietly within 100 feet. For the next hour, camera shutters were clicking constantly, and many yards of videotape were spinning off their reels.

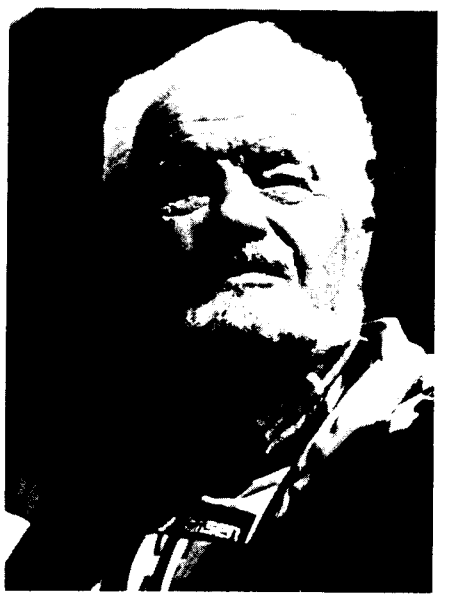
Leaving the islands, we soon reached the permanent pack ice of the Arctic Ocean, and from then on — for the next nine days — there was a constant jolting and shuddering as the ship pushed her way steadily through the packed floes. Although her speed was reduced, she never hesitated. The ice averaged about two meters in thickness, and we could see the leads opening, often 100 yards ahead of the bow, as she forced her way onward.

On the fifth day in the pack, we reached the North Pole, the Transpolar Bridge, and a big celebration was staged. A barbecue was set up on a nearby floe, two poles were erected, and between them were flown the flags of all the nations represented by our shipmates. A few of us took a quick swim: There was a patch of open water on the starboard side, so the gangway was lowered, and we made the Polar Plunge — a very brief one, it must be admitted.

From then on we had a southward course. On the tenth day, we reached semi-open water in the vicinity of the New Siberian Islands. On one island, we found a haulout beach for about a thousand walrus, and, with the rubber Zodiacs, we were able to cruise right up to them. They showed no fear, and even came close to the boats for a better look.

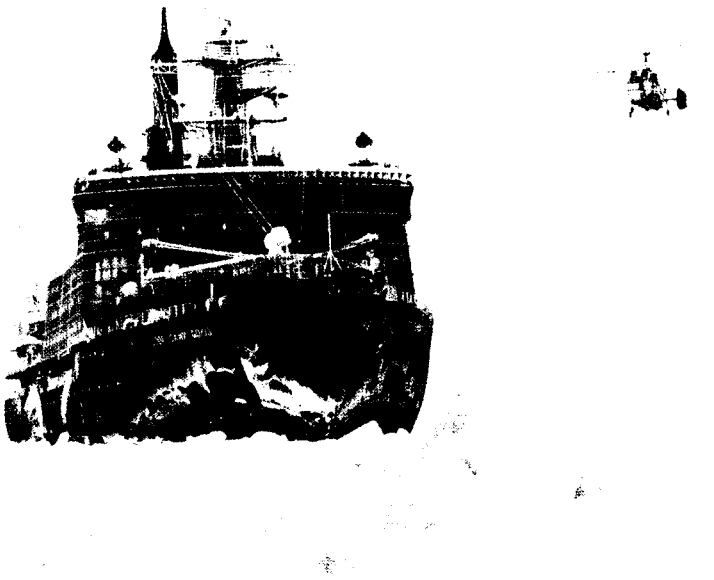
From there, we headed eastward for the pack ice around Wrangel Island, which is a major denning area for polar bears. More bears, including several mothers with cubs, and other wildlife were encountered here.

We then cruised across the Chukchi Sea and through the Bering Strait. The first cruise ended at the small Soviet port of Provideniya, where the passengers were flown to Alaska and homeward.



Dennis Puleston

Our next group of 87 arrived a couple of days later, and we were off again. Among them were many who had been on the Lindblad Explorer in 1984, when we were the first cruise vessel to make a transit of the Northwest Passage, from Newfoundland to Yokohama in 42 days. This time, they were eager to transit the Northeast Passage, from the Bering Strait to Norway's North Cape, heading westward by way of the Siberian north coast. In some ways, this was the more interesting of the two cruises, since we could make more landings, see more wildlife and meet some of the native peoples.



The nuclear-powered Soviet icebreaker, the Sovetskiy Soyuz, flanked by its double-rotor helicopter.

The ship carried two helicopters on the stern deck: One with double rotors could transport 18 people; the other smaller one, about six. They were put into service when shallow water required the ship to anchor a long way from shore, or when there was too much pack ice along the shore to enable us to make landings with the Zodiacs. The helicopters shuttled back and forth between ship and shore continuously for several hours at a time, so everyone had an opportunity to study the plant and animal life of the tundra.

At several places, we found the tusks of ancient mammoths protruding from the permafrost. The ornithologists were thrilled to sight the elusive Ross's gull. A flock of about 200 Emperor geese, an endangered species, was another thrill.

During the second cruise, the great upheaval occurred in the Soviet government. We were visiting the small town of Pevek when the Communist Party office had just been closed and padlocked, and its sign torn down. The crew members were very upset by news of the coup, but when it failed, there was much relief and rejoicing, and we held a splendid party to celebrate with our Soviet shipmates.

Most of the officers were reluctant members of the Communist Party, and when it collapsed and was discredited, they were selling their party cards to the passengers as souvenirs for $100. I am sure that the generous tips in U.S. dollars that were shared by the crew at the ends of both cruises were rich rewards for them. The chief engineer, I learned, earns the equivalent of about $30 a month, and the members of the crew make about $15. When I tipped the woman who made up my cabin $40, she burst into tears. She had never in her life been that rich.

One of the big surprises for us was to find out how suddenly Soviet secrecy had changed to openness. A few years ago, anyone pointing a camera at a bridge, a railroad station or even a building would probably have been in trouble. But on the ship, we were all offered tours, in small groups, of the reactors, the control room and the engine room, and we could take all the photographs we wanted. In fact, the crew did everything they could to make the cruises as interesting and rewarding as possible.

The ship's two reactors are of the pressurized water type, similar to Westinghouse models. We were told that when the ship is pushing through heavy ice at full horsepower, 200 grams of enriched uranium are consumed every 24 hours. The ship is refueled at the end of four years.

The cast steel prow is two meters thick at its strongest point. The outer steel hull is 55 millimeters thick where ice is encountered and 25 millimeters elsewhere. The ice knife is located 22 meters aft of the prow.

It is an outstanding paradox that this ship — so well designed, so ruggedly built, so admirably equipped and so competently operated — is the product of a nation that is teetering on the brink of disaster.

For the Soviet officers and crew, as well as for us, these two cruises were a unique experience. We had traveled the Northeast Passage, we had crossed the North Pole, and we had seen much wildlife and interesting people, in parts of the world never before seen by tourists. Moreover, we had established warm and lasting friendships with our fine Soviet shipmates on a splendid ship.

In other words, and in more senses than one, we had broken the ice with the Soviets.

The routes of the Sovetskiy Soyuz.

Prints by Puleston

Between trips, Dennis Puleston wends his way back to his home on Long Island, where he has always found the birds and plants as fascinating as those that live in more exotic climes. In fact, Puleston has painted a collection of watercolors of the bird species that occur here. Limited edition offset lithographs of six of Puleston's paintings have been released, including the Belted Kingfishers picture here. Prints and ordering information can be viewed in a private display on the bulletin board in the BERA Sales Office in Berkner Hall.

"Greetings to everyone at BNL. I worked at Brookhaven National Lab from March 1947 till May 1981 — almost 35 years. My BNL life number was 574.

"I started as an inventory clerk with Supply & Materiel, then the Electronics Department, and finally with Safety & Environmental Protection.

"When I first read the notice in the Bulletin about the retirement notes, I wrote out eight pages longhand and described so many incidents you would have been bored to death. Therefore, in short phrases which do become longer (my style):

"My first visit to Camp Upton was as a young Brooklyn National Guardsman, December 26-31, 1939. We trained and used 40 old CCC [Civilian Conservation Corps] barracks as shelter from the below-zero weather we seemed to get in those days.

"Summer of 1940, I went to Camp Upton. I was rejected from National Guard when they mobilized February 1941 (third-degree flat feet). However, one year later, I was drafted into the U.S. Army Infantry. I spent three days in Camp Upton and was sent to training camp with 36th Texas Infantry Division (still third-degree flat feet, but evidently no more a major issue).

"After one-year training and another 1-1/2 years overseas in ETO [Euopean Theater of Operations], I was returned to the States with malaria and very third-degree flat feet.

"I was reassigned to the Camp Upton Convalescent Hospital 1234th SCSU, from August 1944 to December 1945. Then I returned to Camp Upton as a civilian until in August 1946 the hospital was closed.

"I applied to BNL in March 1947 and was hired the very first day it became officially Brookhaven Lab. . .

"We did work hard, especially at the beginning, but it became more and more normal routine once most labs were set up.

"Retirement is wonderful, but working there 35 years in such illustrious company and wonderful surroundings was also an experience I'm delighted to have gone through. And God bless the medical coverage and the pension plan. I hope you all have the best experience possible too, and happy holidays."

— Anthony Meo

"p.s. My wife Madeline worked in the Chemistry Department for almost nine years, from 1974 till 1983, and she also has pleasant memories of BNL, but did not have too much contact with the old Camp Upton."

"BNL is always 'happy memories' in my memories.

"You are always 'kept alive' since we have a BNL annex around us. Many Long Island people live in just our complex in Ocala. Many BNL retirees visit with us, and many live in our area.

"I thank God always I was privileged to work at BNL, enabling me to move to Florida. I needed a warmer climate because of my physical condition.

"Dorothy and I try to keep as active as possible. We just celebrated our 55th wedding anniversary.

"God bless all of you."
