'Atomic Medicine' To Be Aired On Sunday

A bold, new medical frontier has been uncovered inside the atom; its unique powers and how doctors hope to use them will be explored in a repeat showing of "The 21st Century" report on Atomic Medicine 6-6:30 p.m. Sunday in color on the CBS television network.

A prototype of the atomic hospital of tomorrow will be seen in operation at the Medical Center of Brookhaven National Laboratory. The hospital has its own nuclear reactor to manufacture, on order, the specific radioisotopes needed to diagnose and treat its patients.

Computerized control of radiation, the basic tool of atomic medicine, will be demonstrated in cancer treatment at the Memorial Hospital for Cancer and Allied Diseases in New York City.

The mighty power of nuclear radiation is controlled by a computer system that, in the future, will become a regional cancer center linked with dozens of hospitals.

G.T. Seaborg, chairman of the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission, and Dr. V.P. Bond, BNL Associate Director, Life Sciences and Chemistry, will discuss the future of atomic medicine with CBS News correspondent Walter Cronkite.

The series is sponsored in the public interest by Union Carbide Corporation.

Iona Completes Journey

Special to the Bulletin Board - The sloop Iona, skippered by Alan Forsyth, formerly of the Accelerator Department, has arrived in St. Thomas, Virgin Islands.

The trip from Bermuda to St. Thomas took 8 days, almost to the hour, after clearing Hamilton Harbor. During the period spent in the doldrums the crew fished and swam. A large wahoo caught during the voyage provided a change in diet. Navigation to the Islands was routine, and sights were checked out with the powerful radio beacon broadcast from St. Thomas. Except for several night squalls, passage was good and auxiliary power was used only to escape the doldrums.

Mrs. Edith Forsyth and son, Colin joined the Iona in St. Thomas. The mail pick-up for the Iona is in care of Yacht Haven, Charlotte Amalie, St. Thomas, Virgin Islands.

Mobile Blood Irradiator

For medical research and clinical treatment of some forms of leukemia, a compact and mobile blood irradiator has been developed. Weighing less than 50 lbs., including shielding, it can be moved easily to the patient's bedside. The technique of irradiating blood outside the patient's body was pioneered by Brookhaven National Laboratory. The extracorporeal irradiation technique permits a high dosage of radiation while avoiding exposure of the body.

The new unit achieves its small size and mobility through use of beta emissions from a strontium-90 source. Beta radiation, with its short penetrating range, is almost entirely absorbed in the blood, permitting a much lower amount of radiation than units using gamma emissions from cobalt-60 or cesium-137. Developed by Atlantic Research scientists, the mobile device requires only simple shielding of secondary X-ray emission.

Where Are Your Car Keys?

Last week in Geneva a Frenchman bought 220 pounds of gold worth about $120,000, and promptly lost it when he left his automobile open with the keys in the ignition, police said.

The man had just left his car - and the key - when it roared off.

The vehicle was found by the police about two hours later - minus the gold.

You may or may not be fortunate enough to have $120,000 in gold in your car, but why take chances with your car. Take your keys with you.

Rongelap Islanders Tour UN, Manhattan 8-674-68

The four Marshall Islanders who are being examined at BNL were taken on a tour of New York by Dr. Robert Conard of the Medical Department. The group is shown above in the lobby of the UN building. 8-653-68

Marshallese Awed By New York City

The journey from a small Pacific atoll to BNL was not nearly so exciting to the four Marshall Islanders as was the more recent trip from BNL to Manhattan Island.

Last Thursday, Elio Boas, Namiko Kalal, and George and Lekoj Anjain, accompanied by their interpreter Sebjo Shoniber were taken to New York City to "see the sights" and visit the UN. Their guides were Dr. Robert Conard and William Scott of the BNL Medical Department.

After completing a Circle Line boat ride around Manhattan Island, the group rode over to the UN Buildings and took a guided tour of the United Nations. "We saw so many buildings," said Shoniber, "that the boys were absolutely fascinated." On the trip crosstown, the car in which they were riding stalled out at a light on 34th Street, and the boys all cheerfully climbed out and pushed the car over to a service station.

After the UN tour was over, the trip home via expressway was the next source of amazement. According to Shoniber, most of the Marshall Islanders think that the expressways are dangerous, and a good place to stay away from.

Back at BNL, there was a very active discussion that night in the Pavillion where the Marshallese are quartered. Namiko, the only woman in the group, was glad she had seen the city, but felt that it would be much too confusing to live in permanently. George, who likes plenty of action, was tired out, and ready to go to sleep. Sebjo Shoniber, the interpreter, would like to have gone to the top of the Empire State Building, but will save that for another visit.

The Islanders have their own dining room at the hospital, and are constantly at odds with the dietician about their choice of menu. They are provided with an ample supply of rice, fish and fruits, but resist every effort on the part of the dietician to get them to eat vegetables or salads. Some of the boys have learned to drink milk, but Namiko refuses to be converted.

During the day the Islanders are being tested and examined, but in the evenings and during weekends, they are being entertained in the typical American manner. Since coming here they have been to a luau at the home of Robert Smith of Photography, a luncheon and boat ride at the Conards, and a picnic at the Clareus house. "Everyone has been so nice to us that we haven't had time to be lonely or homesick," said Sebjo Shoniber.

American homes have impressed the visitors very much. At one home they were fascinated by the toy trains for the children. At another home they were in awe of the modern kitchen appliances.

When they are not out visiting, the group can usually be found in the TV lounge in the Medical Department. TV is a new thing to all except Shoniber, and in just a few day's time, they have almost all become addicts of the picture tube.

After a trip to Boston for some surgery to correct their thyroid conditions the group will return to BNL for a few days and then will return to Rongelap Island in time for the opening of school.

On Tuesday morning it was announced by President Johnson that the people of Bikini would be allowed to return to their atoll after twenty years of being away. The White House announced that a special committee of which Dr. Robert Conard is a member, had concluded that "exposures to radiation that would result from repatriation of the Bikini people do not offer a significant threat to their health and safety."

Dr. Conard explained that the decision, arrived at several months ago was the result of a review of data collected during several surveys of the Pacific atoll. Plans are now being made to return the people within a year or so, and BNL will be responsible for monitoring the Bikini people to see that they do not absorb too much radiation.

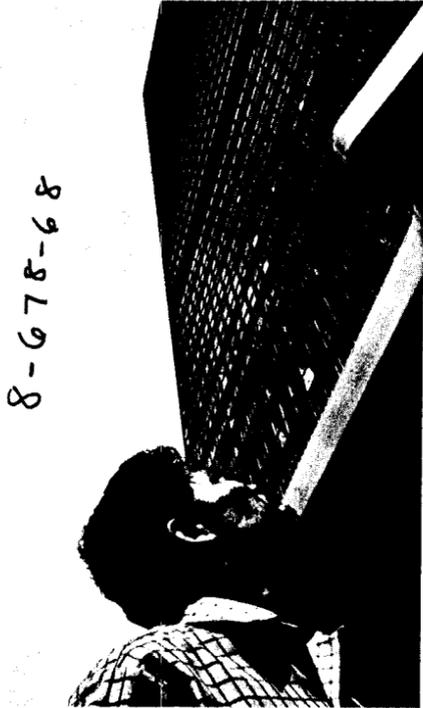

BNL's monitoring will be similar to the work done with the Rongelap people and will probably be done at the same time that the Rongelap surveys are made. A whole-body counter will be constructed on Bikini and body burdens will be regularly examined. The surveys that have been made of the atoll have looked at data from the soil, the vegetation and from material on the ground. Most of the older people from Bikini want to go back home, and now they will have their chance.

Car troubles got all the boys out to push the car across 34th Street on the way to the UN building.

According to Sebio Shoniber, the Island where the Bikini people are now living is not as good as Bikini. "Kili has no reef," said Shoniber, "Without a reef the seas are rough for many days and boats cannot land to bring rice and buy copra. On Bikini there is a good reef for fishing and a good harbor for trade boats to come in and bring the things the people need." It is estimated that about 200 Bikini Islanders will return to the atoll as soon as houses are built and taro and breadfruit plants are planted.

Weekend Home Repairs and Taxes
by Bob Butscher

It seems every weekend some repair has to be made to our homes. Many of these projects can be important to your tax planning and tax savings.

Projects such as finishing the attic, fixing up a house for sale, or repairing and repainting after a casualty are costs or expenses that can affect your current or future taxes. The important thing is to save your repair bills to support deductions you take.

Bills for repairs to your house that qualify as capital improvements (not routine maintenance expenses) should be saved from the day you buy a house. This means saving bills for possibly 10, 20 or more years. If you bought a home only ten years ago, you may already have invested in improvements an amount equal to or greater than the original price of your home. The problem comes up when you sell your house and try to determine the cost basis (purchase price plus improvements) of your house for computing the gain (which may be taxable) or the loss (which is not deductible) on the sale. Without adequate records you may not know how much you have spent in improvements to your home much less be able to support the amount to a tax agent.

One thought for easing the bookkeeping upon the sale of your home is to keep the bills in a separate envelope for all items bought - lumber, cement, paint, and even nails and hardware - for each home improvement project. Add up all the bills and write the total cost of the job on the outside of the envelope also noting the description of the project and the date. Saving these envelopes can save you time and effort when you sell your house.

If you are planning to sell your home, "fixing up" expenses incurred within 90 days prior to the contract can be deducted from the amount realized on the sale. Again, it is important to save the bills for at least the same length of time you save medical bills and other tax items.

Repair bills are also important if you suffer a casualty loss. Although repair costs are not the measure of the casualty loss, they can be important proof in showing loss of value to your property. Of course, written appraisals of the loss by competent appraisers is the best evidence. Before-and-after photographs also help.

Proof of these repair costs can be of prime importance when you are audited.

Visit With Marshallese

by Terry Wood

The hour and a half that I spent with Namiko, Elio, George and Lekoj wasn't nearly enough time to get to know them. After having talked with them I realize that they are young people just as I am who enjoy basically the same type of fun and people as I do.

Getting them to be comfortable wasn't easy and I'm afraid that I didn't accomplish that completely. George is a young boy who, like any boy his age, is mischievous, and fun loving.

The Marshallese think that almost everything and everyone in America is "nice." There are only a few exceptions - They feel generally that highways are dangerous and Namiko doesn't care for the bustle of the big city.

American food isn't very palatable to these inhabitants of the Marshall Islands. They're very thankful that Americans include rice and fruit in their diets. American food is, for the most part, processed, and the Marshallese are not accustomed to processed food.

During the weekend they visited White's Department Store. They didn't spend much time in the store, but while they were there they bought a few articles. Namiko bought a yellow sweater and the boys bought a camera. They like American department stores but feel they are somewhat confusing.

Also during the weekend they visited New York City. The most interesting event during their visit to New York City was having to push their car, which broke down in the middle of 34th Street. It seems ironic that they had to come to the United States to push a car.

Kevey Takes Trophy

Andrew Kevey, Physics, is presented with the Senior Men's Singles trophy by Dan Schaeffer of the BERA Tennis committee.

In the championship of the Senior Men's Singles last Friday, Andy Kevey showed increasing strength and confidence as the match progressed and decisively swept the second set to defeat Stu Bookless, 6-4, 6-1.

During the initial two games of the first set, each contestant may have been bothered by nerves as each lost his service. Once the score had been evened, however, the quality of play improved greatly and the set became a seesaw battle with each player holding service until the tenth game. In the tenth game, Kevey finally broke service after the game had been to deuce four times. What may have been the turning point of the match came in the eighth game when Bookless had to go to deuce three times before prevailing.

In the second set, Kevey broke Bookless' service in the fourth and sixth games, using an effective combination of chops and lobs. Only one game in this set went to deuce; the last, in which Bookless came back from match point once but could not repeat.

Safety Shoe Issue

During the last week in August, the Safety Shoe Vendor will be away on vacation. He will be open for business as usual on Thursday morning September fifth.

Hallowe'en in August?

Could it be possible? Who would attempt such a thing? But there it was, a Halloween Party, the BERA Morning Program's Special for Friday, August 9th.

Seventy-five children arrived in costume and participated in contests and games. Ribbons were awarded for the "Best Costumes". Twenty-five mothers arrived to root the children on.

The gang dunked for apples, each containing nickels and dimes. Then there were donuts on strings to chase and Kool-Aid to drink.

The "Crazy House" as building #317 is called, was a mess of donuts, apples and water, but it was all in good fun. As long as there was a good time and enjoyment it was a worthwhile effort. Thank you for coming - Have Fun!

BERA Film Series

Thursday, August 22 - 8 p.m. - Lecture Hall
Darling

A lovely young model (Julie Christie) and a sophisticated TV writer-interviewer Dirk Bogarde who leave their respective mates (and he, his children, too) live together in London, where they both work. They seem quite happy until Bogarde discovers that Miss Christie has been having occasional amorous rendezvous with her excellent public relations man, in the hopes of furthering her career. Bogarde then leaves her, she goes to Italy with a homosexual photographer, and while doing a TV commercial there meets and marries a rich Italian prince with seven children, thus having reached the domestic and professional pinnacles of the jet-set crowd.

Restless in her new role, she soon flies back to London to Bogarde; they make love, and he, unhappily, sends her back to continue living with her prince; The Darling had done enough. The photography is quite good and the dialogue clever in Director John Schlesinger's sensitive portrait of an insensitive, immoral young woman bound to "make the scene" with the jet-set by sleeping with the right people.
