A New Standard For The 80s

If every home appliance had to have a different kind of plug, and every automobile a special fuel, life would be much more difficult and expensive than it already is. With the whirlwind development of electronic equipment, high energy physics researchers now find themselves in such a situation when constructing equipment for an experiment.

While some electronic equipment must be built explicitly for a particular experiment, most of the devices are similar to those used in other experiments. By having a standard electronic system specification, equipment can be used over and over again in different configurations to do different research. Brookhaven's high energy equipment pool, HEEP, makes this equipment available, most of which has been built to one of two earlier standards, NIM or CAMAC. These standards have served well for several decades, but the development of the integrated circuit, in particular, has made them less useful and more expensive.

Taking advantage of the cost reduction and speed made possible with integrated circuits, a new computerized data acquisition system called FASTBUS has been built by Larry Leipuner's group in the Physics Department in collaboration with Bob Adair's group at Yale. Experimenters can now control an experiment from a centralized facility. This system will allow equipment to be used over and over again in different experiments, and will allow the easy interconnection of all kinds of electronics. Not only can experiments be done more cheaply and quickly, but FASTBUS will permit new experiments that cannot now be done with current equipment and standards.

Nowadays, in most high energy experiments, computers are used to gather and analyze data, and to monitor and control the equipment. FASTBUS takes its name from what is known as a computer bus. A computer bus is the linkage between the various parts of the computer, and FASTBUS extends this architecture to all of the high energy experimental electronic equipment. When viewed from the computer side of the bus, drift chambers or proportional wire chambers, or scintillation counters are just other devices such as card readers or printers. Now, experiments can be controlled from a central point. The more repetitive and boring tasks can be relegated to automatic facilities provided by the computer. As soon as control of the equipment becomes routine, experimenters can transfer it easily to computer management.

FASTBUS is fast. Normally, the speed is about 10 million, 32 bit transactions per second. Blocks of data may be transferred at about two and one half times this rate, giving almost a billion bits of transfer per second.

Doug Humphrey

Larry Leipuner

These rates are greater than present computers can handle, but can be processed by the next generation of computers. Currently, however, the speed can be used to do low level processing while the data is still on the bus.

Experiment 735, now running at the AGS, has a simple data processor module designed for just this purpose. Using special registers, the processor relieves the computer of the task of finding which of over 200 scintillation counters responded to an event. The on-bus processor directs the data gathering and performs the data compaction as well.

This experiment, a Yale/BNL collaboration, is the first experiment to use FASTBUS. It is Leipuner's expectation that, in the future, most high energy electronics will be built to this more powerful standard.

Head of P & GA

Effective September 1, John B. Laurie will succeed Robert P. Brown as head of the Photography and Graphic Arts Division. Laurie has been Assistant Manager of the Division since December 1, 1978, in which capacity he was primarily responsible for personnel actions. Before assuming the latter duties, Laurie was Technical Supervisor of the Quick Copy Service Center.

Patents Awarded

Richard Holroyd and Benon Bielski, Chemistry Department, were issued U.S. Patent No. 4,199,419 for inventing a photochemical method for generating superoxide radicals (O_2^-) in aqueous solutions.

Meyer Steinberg, DEE, was awarded U.S. Patent No. 4,197,421 for an invention involving synthetic carbonaceous fuels and feedstocks. A primary object of this invention is to provide a process for extracting CO_2 from the atmosphere and combining this with electrolytic hydrogen to produce synthetic gas and gasoline.

No Weekend Tour

Because of the Labor Day holiday, the Lab will be closed to public tours this weekend. Tours will resume September 6 and 7.

New Post For Brown

The appointment of Robert P. Brown as Information Technology Administrator was announced this week by Associate Director Vincent O'Leary. Effective September 1, Brown will administer a program designed to develop a Lab-wide information network comprised of word processors, electronic typewriters, computer graphic systems and copiers which communicate with each other, with data bases and with automated micro or macropublishing systems.

In this capacity, he will interact with the departments and divisions on the selection of new components and the modernization of existing equipment. In addition, Brown will serve as a technical advisor to the Divisions of Contracts and Procurement and Supply and Materiel on the acquisition of word processors, copiers and micrographic equipment.

In Memoriam

Raymond E. Farmer, a BNL Firefighter, died on August 18 after a long illness, at the age of 64. He had been a member of the Fire and Rescue Group since January 3, 1961. In a time-honored tradition, his fellow firefighters paid tribute to their comrade, and an honor guard of six BNL Firefighters accompanied the cortege. Farmer, who lived in Mastic Beach, is survived by his wife, Thelma, and two sons; Tirre, a BNL Refrigeration and Air Conditioning Apprentice, and Raymond, who resides in Shirley.

Placement Notices

The Laboratory's placement policy is to select the best-qualified candidate for an available position, with consideration given to candidates in the following order of priority: (1) present employees within the department, with preference to those within the immediate work group; (2) present employees within the Laboratory as a whole; and (3) outside applicants.

The determination of the best-qualified candidate for available positions will be based upon education, experience and other job-related criteria. Such factors will be evaluated and measured against the demonstrable requirements of the available vacancy, as well as the Laboratory's Affirmative Action objectives.

The Laboratory is committed to a policy of Equal Opportunity in its selection and placement of personnel. Its objective is equality of opportunity in employment, training, and promotion without regard to race, color, religion, national origin, sex, age or handicap.

Each week, the Personnel Office lists new personnel placement requisitions. The purpose of these listings is, first, to provide open placement information on all nonscientific staff positions; second, to give employees an opportunity to request consideration for themselves through Personnel; and, finally, for general recruiting purposes. Because of the priority preference policy stated above, each listing does not necessarily represent an opportunity for all candidates. As a guide to readers, the listings are grouped according to the anticipated area of recruitment, as indicated below. Except when operational needs require otherwise, positions will remain open for one week following publication date.

For further information regarding a placement listing, contact the Personnel Placement Supervisor, Ext. 2882.
