Cool Story: Building on the Rocks

The "cool" movers included: (from left) Supervisor Alex Korol, Jerry Hobson, Jeffrey Tabacco, Robert Medina, Roy Johnson, Robert Metz, Arthur Anderson, James Sadloski, and Johnnie Turner, all of the Plant Engineering Division except Metz of the Environmental & Waste Management Services Division.

Imagine a 20-foot by 40-foot, two-story, prefabricated, pre-engineered building that needs to be moved about 200 yards without damaging the structural integrity of the building. That is what needed to be done with the "two-story condo" located in the experimental area of Building 912 since the mid 1980s. The building was originally purchased and used for about 10 years as an electronic counting house and control room for two rare kaon decay experiments, E791 and E871 at the Alternating Gradient Synchrotron. It was decided that this building could be used to house the electronic equipment for a prototype energy recovery linac that is the basis for electron (e) cooling in both the present Relativistic Heavy Ion Collider (RHIC) and the future eRHIC.

Ice Movers Do Not Shake

Led by Alex Korol, the rigging team in the Plant Engineering Division (PE) came up with a "cool" idea to move the structure: ice rigging.

Says Korol, "This is a unique way of getting some jobs done. Typically, when buildings or large objects are moved, jacks are used to raise and lower them, but lowering a building can potentially damage the integrity of the structure."

"With ice rigging," he continues, "the jacks are removed only after large blocks of ice are placed under the structure. The edges of the ice melt first, allowing the structure to be lowered slowly as the ice melts. Once the ice melts, you mop up the water and the job is done. The structural integrity of the building remains intact, and the building is fit for use."

To start this BNL move, framework was installed under the building, and a BNL heavy equipment mechanic operator lifted the building using a crane attached to the framework. The building and framework were then placed onto rollers and moved to the new location. There, the riggers used the crane to lift it all off the rollers and place it on temporary supports. Then they removed the framework. After that, 20 large blocks of ice, purchased at a Riverhead ice distributor, were placed under the building, and the temporary supports removed. When the ice melted, the building was located exactly where it needed to be.

Al Pendzick, head of the facilities and experimental support group in the Collider-Accelerator Department (C-AD), says he thought the ice rigging was a clever idea.

"Employees from C-AD and Plant

Engineering worked together to come up with the best way to move the building, and it proved to be the ice rigging," he says. "The rigging team put together a plan that really worked out well."

Korol explains that BNL riggers move items on site that can range from boxes of books to heavy machinery to "one of a kind" experimental equipment that can weigh up to 20 tons or more. Typical tools of the trade include slings made from a variety of materials, forklifts, jacks, cranes, rollers, chain falls — and above all, a keen sense of safety for each other. The BNL riggers frequently take training classes that make it possible for them to perform the unique rigging jobs at the Lab safely.

"The greatest asset of a rigging crew is good teamwork," says Korol. "That's what allows the crew to attain exceptional results."

Master Rigging Program

In order to meet the challenges of rigging tasks, Plant Engineering, in cooperation with the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (IBEW), established the Master Rigging Program in 1997, when Rigging Supervisor Jim O'Malley saw that an intense and specific training plan was needed to provide a new generation of riggers with a foundational understanding of rigging and an awareness of the more complex aspects and concepts of the trade.

Most recently, nine BNL riggers completed the Master Rigging program. Their curriculum required their taking a nine-module, self-study correspondence course offered by Education Direct, a company specializing in workforce development, as well as classroom and hands-on practical training. Emphasis in the program is on safety, along with proper equipment inspection, weight estimations, calculations of sling angles, load factors, load centers of gravity, and the selection of "the right tool for the job at hand."

Joe Buscemi, (PE), and President of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, says, "The master rigging program is a good example of how employees and Lab management can partner to improve workforce development, enhance safety, and still get the job done."

Ed Murphy, PE Division Head, adds, "Rigging is a difficult and potentially dangerous craft, so it is essential that the Lab has trained professionals on the job."

— Jane Koropsak

Placement Notices

The Lab's placement policy is to select the best-qualified candidate for an available position. Candidates are considered in the following order: (1) present benefits-eligible employees within the department/division and/or appropriate bargaining unit, with preference for those within the immediate work group; (2) present benefits-eligible employees within the Laboratory; and (3) outside applicants. In keeping with the Affirmative Action Plan, selections are made without regard to age, race, color, religion, national origin, sex, disability or veteran status. Each week, the Human Resources Division lists new placement notices, first, so employees may request consideration for themselves, and, second, for open recruitment. Because of the priority policy stated above, each listing does not necessarily represent an opportunity for all people. Except when operational needs require otherwise, positions will be open for one week after publication. For more information, contact the Employment Manager, Ext. 2882. Access current job openings on the World Wide Web at www.bnl.gov/HR/jobs/.

The following positions have been exempted from the freeze by the Deputy Director:

OPEN RECRUITMENT – Opportunities for Laboratory employees and outside candidates.

MK3428. POSTDOCTORAL RESEARCH ASSOCIATE – Requires a Ph.D. in materials science or a closely related field, advanced and applied knowledge of phase transitions and equilibria in magnetostuctural systems, thin films synthesis and a background knowledge of nanopatterning techniques. In addition, proficiency in standard materials characterization techniques such as electron microscopy and x-ray diffraction is necessary as is expertise in magnetic characterization techniques and analysis. Familiarity with synchrotron based materials characterization techniques is desirable. Under the direction of L. Lewis, Center for Functional Nanomaterials

TB3653. STAFF SPECIALIST (A-6, reposting) – Requires a bachelor's degree in accounting, business administration or equivalent plus at least four years related experience. Extensive administrative experience should include financial performance, contract administration, coordination of program funding, grant preparation, and financial reporting. Excellent written and oral communication skills, proficiency in Excel and other MS Office products and experience with PeopleSoft is required. Will assist in overall management for the department administrative business activities including budgets, subcontracts, and grant preparations (DOE and other federal agencies). Medical Department.

Services

BNLers perform a wide range of services, which The Bulletin lists as a courtesy to BNL employees. Services are neither screened nor recommended by The Bulletin. Lack of space prevents services from appearing in printed form in The Bulletin on a regular basis, but they may be seen any time from on site at <http://intranet.bnl.gov/ads/displayAdsAll.asp>.

The following list is the most up-to-date available. Services must advertise only the personal business of the employee; if the employee is working for an outside company, or selling goods on commission, the listing may not be included. To list a service, go to "Submit an ad" on the BNL intranet home page, bottom, right; or e-mail bulletin@bnl.gov, or mail The Bulletin, Bldg. 134. Services will remain listed for one year, then be automatically deleted, and the employee must re-submit the service.

To get a copy of current services from off site, e-mail gvbennett@bnl.gov to request an e-mailed copy, or call 344-6273 for a paper copy to be mailed to your building or your home.
